Attendees were mostly Latino mothers with their kids. The topics that we discussed were drinking water, surface water and ground water, existing land use practices. Most present community concerns revolved around the water quality within schools. The engagement of the audience was through asking questions and addressing their concerns verbally. We utilize Bimini Slough Park to provide support and illustrate process of rain water, as mentioned in our packet. Lastly, the parents were interested in receiving more information that required little usage of the internet. One concern was that many of these individuals had limited access to wifi.
